December 21, 1989

Dear Friend:

Living with a disability can be challenging but the strength one receives through the support of others and the reality that living with a disability does not mean inability makes all the difference.

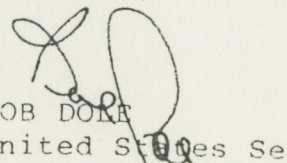

Hundreds of people fight and overcome the challenges that an unexpected disability can impose. Assisting victims of head injuries by providing opportunities to make the necessary transitions is key to recovery and productivity.

The JMA Foundation has been there to assist families with the necessary transition needed to overcome the difficulties one faces when a loved one is severely injured. Education and information dissemination has and will continue to play a critical role in meeting this endeavor. With your help and contribution JMA can continue to provide the outreach needed to make the transition a success.

Please send a contribution today so the JMA Foundation can make that positive difference.

They are counting on us--and we're counting on you.

Sincerely,

BOB DOLE
